

Busy as he usually is, if there's one place that David Cassidy heads for when he's got a few days off, it's that island in the sun, Hawaii. It was a few years back now that David first visited the island, but from the first time it was a place he fell in love with, and promised himself that when the time came for him to decide where he wanted to live, it was going to be there.

At first David just went there for holidays, but then a couple of years ago he decided to take the first step towards realising his dream home, and bought a large plot of land on the island. Most of us, at one time or another, probably spend hours daydreaming about the kind of house we'd like to live in, if only we had the money – unfortunately most of us don't

David's Domain

... His Own Garden Of Eden

have the money, but David has.

The house is still a long way from being completed, but David's spending a lot of time working on all the things he wants to be included. Helping with the actual design he's got a group of very young architects who've been involved in some very different types of building schemes in California.

David's a great nature-lover, and is very interested in ecology – anything that concerns preserving the earth – and wants these interests to be part of the eventual design.

For instance, he's trying to see if the electricity in the house can be provided by the house's own generator, but not a generator like those used in big shops and places, but one powered by wind. So he'd be using Nature's own power supply!

David's sure of one thing though, and that's that the house and the grounds will contain all the things that he feels he needs around him – including plenty of facilities for recording. Along with plenty of room for doing all the singing and composing he likes whenever he feels like it, he'll also be making sure that there's tons of room for horses, because David puts riding pretty high on his list when it comes to relaxing.

One thing's for sure, David works pretty hard – this year doing his huge tour round the Far East, Australia, Europe and Britain – and we reckon he deserves a great place to go home to. Trouble is, we imagine there's going to be quite a few people saving their pennies up to visit his island just to see him!
