TWINKLES TINKLES AND WRINKLES

The Rich Man

It was one of those days when everything just went the right way for John Moneybags. The phone rang and he answered it.

"This is Walter Meadows speaking. The syndicate has finally agreed to your terms. That means a cool million dollars profit for you. Will send the papers over by special messenger."

There was a smile of self satisfaction as he hung up the receiver. A minute later the phone rang again.

"This is your attorney speaking. The Internal Revenue Department has just notified me that you will get a tax refund of half a million dollars. Checks should be on its way in a week or two."

He was now beaming joy. He lit a Havana cigar and puffed out some smoke rings. He knew his little son, Peter, always enjoyed catching those smoke rings.

The phone rang a third time. It was a call from overseas.

"This is Frank Chambers speaking. The Dictator has agreed not to touch your mines. He feels you have done so much for his country. That means you avoid a loss of sixteen million dollars."

He figured the rest of the calls would be the same and that his private secretary could take care of them. He used the private elevator from his office to his garage. His chauffeur had the car ready. An hour later he was in his magnificent home in the suburbs. His son Peter had a simple request to make.

"Please give me a dollar, Dad. I want to buy a box kite and fly it tomorrow."

"A dollar," shouted his father. "What do you think I am made of? I am not a billionaire. All I can spare is fifty cents for you."

Carnival Time

The carnival has come to town! The tents have all been pitched on a very big vacant lot. There are rides for the small fry. But the barkers are all busy. Want you to come over and try their attraction. And part with some of your money.

"Come in and have Madam Lzsoonga read your palm," shouts one barker. "For the small price of half a dollar she will tell you your future. Who knows what tomorrow holds for you? Madam Lzsoonga knows."

Then you stop in front of a stand with large teddy bears in the background.

"Try your skill," shouts the barker. "You get ten shots for a quarter. What a bargain! And look at those prizes. Easy for you to win. Step up closer and let me show you."

"Get your hot dogs and soda here," shouts another barker. You have the appetite. We have the food. Fresh as they come! Only 45 cents each. Get your hot dog!"

And then you stop in front of another tent. A lot of people listening to this barker.

"Come in and see the KILLER! This is an educational exhibit. You will never forget it. Only ten cents to cover our expenses. Children free when accompanied by their parents. Come in and see the KILLER! You may be the next victim. How can you protect yourself? Come on in."

So I parted with a dime. And what did I see? Sure, it was a KILLER. The worst one of all: An automobile!

Horse Sense

My friend, Thomas Reilly, runs a riding academy on the outskirts of the city. Our younger son, Michael, felt he was old enough to begin to learn to ride. So Thomas gave him three lessons. And then he took me aside.

"Tomorrow when you go out with your son, I think it best he ride Peaceful. As gentle a horse as they come."

So the next day father and son hit "the trail". We passed several other riders from the academy. Then suddenly Peaceful stopped. This sort of angered my son who gave Peaceful a rather heavy kick on the side. The horse reacted rather forcefully. Up she went on her rear legs. Next thing my son knew he had hit the ground. So it came to him as it comes to other riders. The first spill.

I dismounted and helped him to arise. He wasn't hurt and the horse merely looked at him. Peaceful had unseated one more rider. But she was not prepared for what my son did. And neither was I. Michael took several lumps of sugar from his coat pocket.

"Look here, Peaceful," he began. "I brought this for you. But not today. Watch me eat each lump of sugar. You want the sugar? Then tomorrow no stopping unless I order you to do so. And no tricks."

The horse—and this father-watched son Michael eat the sugar. We rode back to the stable. Next day when we came, Michael asked for Peaceful. He showed the horse the sugar and said it could be obtained only if everything went O.K. Know something? That horse—had horse sense! Wanted the sugar! So everything was O.K.
