

PERSONAL LIFE

BILL BIXBY

On-screen or off, the motivating force in Bill's life is honesty. In fact, he's so sincere about the fatherly role he portrays in "The Courtship of Eddie's Father" that he doesn't think of himself as acting. This honest attitude also has a big effect on his personal life and it's reflected in the way he dresses. This happy bachelor wears what he feels comfortable in and worries about pleasing only one person—himself.

JAMES BROLIN

Having proved himself a fantastic actor in the role of Dr. Steven Kiley and a prize-winning horse breeder in the Appaloosa Horse Club, Jim is now embarking on a singing career. He's been taking instructions from one of Hollywood's leading coaches and making such progress, he's interested in getting a few club dates. He lives with his wife Jane and son Josh on a small ranch in Northridge, California.

STEVE BROOKS

Although "The Interns" has been cancelled, Steve hasn't lost any of his determination or confidence. And it's this attitude that has helped him through quite a few hard times in the past. When he quit the series "The FBI" in 1967, he had no acting jobs lined up, but it was the strong belief in his acting ability which led him to make the break. And after a long period of unemployment, he got a chance to audition for "The Interns" and wasn't even nervous reading the script. With all that talent—it's not hard to believe.

CAROL BURNETT

One of the strangest experiences in Carol's life occurred while she was recovering from a foot operation. As she was watching the quiz shows on TV, she began to play along and was really amazed at how well she was doing. Information that she couldn't remember before the operation was suddenly at her fingertips, and this ability lasted for two days. Carol thinks the anesthetic might have caused it, but she's still puzzled.

GLEN CAMPBELL

There's a lot of people who spend their time wishing they had been born rich, but Glen considers himself lucky to have come from a simple country background. In fact, he attributes his success to this and claims that's why he sings and plays country-and-Western songs so well. When he sings about hard times, the audience senses he's had quite a few of his own and his sincerity is what leaves them asking for more.

DAVID CASSIDY

There's one problem David Cassidy's never going to have to face—boredom. Even when he's not filming "The Partridge Family" or recording, he keeps busy in his new multi-level home in Hollywood Hills. To keep him company, he's got a pool table, swimming pool and the recording and musical tools of his trade. It all makes for a satisfying and fun-filled life.
