DAVID CASSIDY

It seems like yesterday when my cousin and I got up very early and decided to take out my boat. My cousin is a fantastic water skier, and before we even had our morning juice, we wanted to get on the lake, as you have to be off skis by 9:00 a.m. in Arrowhead. She wanted to start off with one ski, and I kidded her about 'not showing off.' Surprisingly, she listened to me and started off with two skis. She looked like a real pro.

"The quietness of the water was almost deafening to my ears. When I happened to turn around from the helm of the boat, I couldn't believe what I saw! Her right ski flipped off and she did a back flip, almost breaking her back! The other ski went up and she flipped over, letting go of the ski tow at the same time.

"Scared wasn't the word for how I felt," he continued, "and without thinking, or maybe it was good that I didn't, I immediately made a fast 'U' turn, trying so desperately to get back to her in a matter of seconds, as it was quite obvious that something happened to her life preserver and she was fighting to stay above water. When I made my 'U' turn, I ran right over my own tow line, fouling up both propeller blades."

Laughing quietly he said, "It never fails, when you need an extra life preserver they are always so hard to remove from the sides of the boat. Anyway, jumping overboard, I swam out to her in a matter of seconds, and I have to admit I was pretty scared being out there in the middle of the lake, afraid of what might happen. When I reached her, pulling her back in, the first boat that I saw during the entire episode approached us, helped us aboard and towed my boat in alongside.

"I was petrified when her breathing was faint, but when we got back to land, she was coming around and help was immediately on hand. Sometimes," he said softly, "sometimes, I just can't believe how close my cousin came to death."

There was a weariness written on his handsome face when he spoke of Lake Arrowhead, and at that moment I started to think how my interview with David came about. It all started when I constantly heard the name David Cassidy being repeated at every Hollywood party. Every girl, young and old, had the same compliment for him: "Boy, what a doll!" or "He is everything a girl would want!" Well, I had to find out for myself, and when I reached the Columbia Ranch and was escorted to David's dressing room, I had the feeling that I was going to meet a handsome young lad who had just made it big—and within a short while would probably be spoiled by all the fame that was being bestowed upon him.

My thoughts were pleasantly changed when I was greeted by a handsome young man with fire in his sexy brown eyes, long lashes that didn't quit, and a smile that could melt anyone. After you talk to him for about 5 minutes, you know you are talking to a man who acts much older than his age, someone who has a great deal going for him.

I clued him in on all the young ladies that were waiting outside the studio gate for him, hoping to catch a glimpse of the handsome star. He smiled and
