My Boyfriend's A Flirt

Melanie writer Carole tells you how to cope with a boyfriend who seems to enjoy making eyes at other girls more than he does you!

There's a type of boy who'd never even look at another girl once he'd found a steady - let alone date other girls! Then there's the boy who always seems to have more than one string to his bow. He's the boy who could never be faithful to one girl for very long. Lastly, there's the flirtatious boyfriend - and very often he's the one who's the most fun to be with - as long as you don't take his flirting too seriously!

Lindsey Holland takes boyfriend Mike's flirting very seriously. She's been going out with him for six months now but she still doesn't feel she can really trust him.

"Mike and I get on very well," she told me. "But I'm a far more serious person than he is. I don't mean that I love him more than he loves me. It's just that Mike's the 'life and soul of the party' type and I'm not. He likes to go to parties, dances, and for evenings out with the gang, while I enjoy going to the cinema, for walks in the country - or just staying in. I wouldn't mind if he stayed with me at parties and dances. But he's always leaving me to chat up pretty girls." What did Lindsey do when this happened?

"Oh, I just sit in a corner feeling sorry for myself," she said. "I suppose I should make eyes at other boys, but I couldn't do that. I'm just not the flirtatious type." Did she think Mike ever went out with other girls?

"I'd be very surprised if I found out he was dating another girl 'cos we see each other nearly every evening!" she laughed.

So what was Lindsey worrying about, I asked myself. Mike was obviously very keen on her or he'd be dating these other girls and not just chatting them up! But I did understand how she felt. If you love a boy you're bound to get upset if he flirts with other girls, however much you believe in his love for you. Naturally, you're going to feel neglected and humiliated when your boyfriend dances the last three dances of the evening with some other girl. But you've just got to fight back and the only way you can do it is to do the same to him.

I suggested that Lindsey should try flirting with other boys and make Mike jealous. She might even find that flirting can be fun!
