

WEENYMANIA:

She waited three days for her hero's kiss...

At his first concert in Manchester, girl fans were thrown to the floor and dozens of seats were smashed as rows of screaming weenyboppers were pushed back from the stage.

Dozens of girls were treated for shock or hysteria. Earlier, Cassidy was besieged at his hotel. Girls risked life and limb in ingenious attempts to beat the tight security barrier surrounding the singing star.

One girl climbed on to the hotel roof, announcing that she would not come down until David appeared, although she eventually relented. Others jumped into the hotel swimming pool, hoping to be taken inside to get dry. But they didn't make it. Another girl, Laura Cobain, 19 (pictured below with Cassidy) left her job in Glasgow and waited three days to see her hero. She hid under a table in the hotel, but was spotted and thrown out. But when the Cassidy team heard about her journey, they let her in. She was speechless with joy ...
