

David Cassidy

I don't know about you, but I'm sure I will one day. But I have no plans to retire from show business. Maybe I will do some other things, but I will never stop. The successes and chart places don't mean as much to me as they do to some people. It's just the American show system where it's all about dollars and cents, but life is fortunately different from that.

David is always compared to Donny Osmond. When newspapers write about idols, it's the two of them who are usually lined up, side by side. Does David know Donny at all? From records, he says. "The Osmonds and I have only met in a recording studio once. That's about it. Otherwise I can't see any similarities, apart from the fact that we're popular. David Cassidy takes his tour very calmly. He hardly knows the musicians who join him on his European tour, but his philosophy is that everything will work out. We also asked what he played on his record player at home. "I admire the Beatles very much," he says. Especially the recordings they made in the first 4-5 years.

Technically they may not be as good as the later ones, but I like the first ones best because I was young when they came out and they made a strong impression on me. The Beatles were a fantastic group and David Cassidy himself is fantastic. Casual, cool and young. The Darling David that thousands of girls fall head over heels for.

Autograph signing. It's the same at every airport, but David knows it's part of his job.

As a superstar, you have to hold your tongue, and Mr. Cassidy has been doing that for four years. His press conferences are a balancing act, where on the one hand he must appear polite and on the other he must not be too blunt and honest.
