

DAVID CASSIDY

“I'M TIRED OF JUST BEING A GOOD-LOOKING GUY”

At certain points in his career, the artist has to make drastic decisions. For a long time, David Cassidy was the cute young face who played the eldest son of the Do-Re-Mi family in the TV series. But in real life, David is a talented artist, with several albums to his name. Now it's time for David Cassidy to make a choice: either continue working as an actor, in films and on television, or dedicate himself entirely to his career as a singer-songwriter. Of course, he chose the second. I'm tired of just being a pretty face on the TV screen. For a long time, I was up for it. After all, I used to sing on the show. But then the producers wanted me to do the same thing over and over again, and I couldn't stand it any longer. Now I've decided to give up acting. A lot of people have offered me roles in several important films, but they always exploit my face and my looks. Frankly, I've had enough. From now on, I'm going to dedicate myself to records and concerts, since pop music has always been my true passion. I know my fans will understand. My face may be nice, but so is my voice!