

TeenView Talks To...

David Cassidy

(An Exclusive
TeenView Interview!)

DAVID, with former co-stars Joe Santos, above, and Wendy Restarter, below. Everyone did his best for the series but the ratings weren't good enough. It was axed!

TeenView: How did you feel about returning to television after being away from it for three years?

David: I felt great about it. The pressures of being a star are enormous and I really needed the time away from the whole thing, just to collect myself and figure out what was most important to me. During my absence there were many days that I thought I was done with it for good. I even wondered if I would ever want to work again. But time is a funny thing. You just have to flow with it all and be very patient. I knew that the right decision would come to me, and it did. Now I'm back into the whole scene with renewed energy and confidence! It really feels great to be back!

TeenView: Did you enjoy your work on "Man Undercover"?

David: Absolutely. The entire cast was great! We were all super supportive of each other. That's very important when you're working as a team. If one of us was having a bad day, the rest of the crew always tried to help out. In a business that's as tough and competitive as show business, it's really comforting to be friends with your co-workers. Don't misunderstand me, it really can't matter whether everyone likes me or not, I'm just happier when everybody is friends with everybody else!

TeenView: What about the show itself? How did you feel about it?

David: I enjoyed working on "Man Undercover." I felt that I had the opportunity to work in some really exciting, dramatic scenes. The character I played was a pretty tough guy—that feels good to me. It's the type of acting I enjoy and am seriously interested in doing!

TeenView: Well, now that "Man Undercover" has been cancelled, how do you feel about it and what are your future plans?

David: Whenever a show is cancelled it's a disappointment, and like I said, I really enjoyed working on "Man Undercover." But many things have changed in my life. I know now that I truly want a career in show busi-
